Thank you for consulting Environmental Health on the premises application. I have spoken with the applicant Richard Yardley and discussed concerns around public nuisance licensing objective particularly given the residential use of the flat above. It is also apparent that the planning consent has not conditioned sound insulation or prohibited music as requested by Environmental Health as part of the planning application process. It is therefore, essential that the licence only permits 'background music' not recorded or live music, as this would require extensive sound insulation works to be carried out.

Mr Yardley has agreed, given that he only intended to have low levels background music and therefore Environmental Health have no objection to the application.

Regards
